

Everyday Makeup

1.) Peer into the mirror

-First, try to identify 5 things that you like about your face, because the therapist said you need to do this.

Realize that you don't really like much of anything about your boring ass face.

Analyze every angle and every feature, and calculate how you're going to change it.

Your lips need to be plumped up a little, your eyes need to look more noticeable, your nose needs to not take up your whole entire face when you smile.

Try to convince yourself for one last time, that you are as pretty as people say you are.

Then remind yourself that the people around you are probably lying, since they know you have issues.

You cannot go out like this.

2.) Foundation

Smooth, poreless skin does wonders to make you look prettier than you actually are.

Start with some moisturizer to the face, then use whatever liquid foundation you can afford at the time, and mix it with unscented lotion.

Use a makeup brush to apply that to your face, and make sure to thoroughly cover every little dark spot.

Be sure to brush over that scab at the corner of your mouth, because people may think that's Type 2 herpes, and you don't want them thinking that.

Make sure to cover the slight laugh lines near your cheeks, so that you do not look fat.

If you think you've done enough, slaughter on some more.

3.) Eyebrows

Now, since we're in college, and we have to cut costs somewhere, we're going to be using a brown lip- liner pencil, and mascara.

Use your Black Radiance "True Complexion" Palette, and highlight above and beneath the brows.

Make sure your brown pencil is sharpened. If you need to, tear up your whole room to find that damn sharpener. You need it.

Carefully trace over your brows. Make it look natural. Redo a few dozen times if you have to. Then give up after the millionth try.

Lightly brush over the brows with black mascara.

4.) Highlighting

Yeah, more highlighting.

Use your True Complexion contour palette, and highlight under the eyes, and at the sides of the nose.

Make sure to really cover up those bags underneath your eyes. We need to look perfect.

5.) Nose Contouring

Hopefully you've added a lot of highlight to the sides of your nose. Add some more just to make sure you didn't forget.

Now use the same highlight to make a line in the middle of your nose.

Take the dark brown contour. In between the middle and the sides that you've just spent hours highlighting, draw two dark lines there. This will make your nose look a lot thinner and less obnoxious.

Use your makeup brush to blend in your highlighted cheeks.

Dip your brush into some of that MAC foundation that your mom bought you for Christmas. Go over your highlighted cheeks and nose sides with that. Coat your forehead with the MAC foundation too.

Use your finger to blend in the gold highlight in the middle of your nose.

Use your other fingers to lightly blend in the dark contour on the sides. Use the brush to blend it in some more.

Keep reapplying and blending the contour until you get it just right.

6.) Powder

The powder is used to cover up the bags and tear troughs under your eyes, and to also keep some of the makeup in place. You can use regular setting powder, or you can use cornstarch, which is cheaper.

Get a small brush, and dip it in your chosen powder. Brush it under your eyes, and blend it. Repeat this step until you can no longer see those awful, ugly bags.

Brush some powder onto the middle of your nose to further empathize the highlight.

Put some powder on your laugh lines too.

7.) Examine

Take a step back and examine what you've done so far. Make sure everything is blended correctly. Make sure your nose looks slim and unnoticeable. Smile and see if it still takes up your whole face. If it does, go back and contour it again.

8.) Eyes

Put a light amount of eyeshadow on. Do not go overboard, as to avoid looking like a drag queen. Just a little bit of shimmer, that's all.

Then carefully line your eyes with a thick cat eye.

Be careful, use liquid eyeliner, and do it slowly.

If you mess up, you may need to get a wet cue tip, or just redo your eyes all over again.

Mascara is optional. Your eyelashes are basically nonexistent anyway, so it really doesn't matter.

(You can skip the eyes altogether if it's spring time. Fuck spring time.)

9.) Lips

Your lips also need some work. Thickly outline them with a dark pencil.

Then use a bright lipstick of your choice. It has to match your outfit, so it's usually gonna be red, or purple.

Rub your lips together so that it blends in with the dark outline.

Outline the lips once again, because it is not satisfactory.

Now take a clear lip gloss, and coat the lips with that.

Your lips should look as if they were filled with cream puffs.

10.) Finishing Touches.

Analyze again, and make sure everything is absolutely perfect. Debate with yourself as to whether you look perfect enough, or if you have to redo the whole thing again.

Realize your out of time, and that you're probably already late for class. Then run out the door, still unsatisfied with your appearance.
